

Lord' Ends ;

m

S

final report in March or April.

On the Government side Lords reform looks dead April 2001 was mocked in the press as being little for a long time. The Prime Minister has lost interest, different from previous lists of the great and the and any legislation would need to be introduced by good. It was not the list of 'People's Peers' and the Lord Chancellor, who retains the policy lead hairdressers which No 10 had led the press to expect. within government. Now these two senior figures have come out in favour of an all-appointed House, The Government may be tempted to find a new the spotlight will shift back to the appointments chairman, or to put the Appointments Commission system. The Prime Minister says he wants to give on a statutory basis simply to give it a fresh start. up his power of patronage, but shows little sign of But that would re-open the whole issue of doing so. The Government White Paper emasculated appointment versus election. It would also expose the Appointments Commission proposed by the awkward issue of how, simply through a process Wakeham, and proposed in its place a Commission of appointment, the House of Lords can be made which would appoint only the independent cross more 'democratic and representative', which Labour benchers.

playing at the margins. With their task pre-empted Party nominees will always be liable to be criticised by the Prime Minister, they want to hand the as 'Tony's cronies'. The prototype Appointments problem back to the Government after delivering a Commission has not fared much better. The first and only list of cross benchers put up by Lord Stevenson's new Appointments Commission in promised in their manifestos of 1997 and 2001.

Inquiry on the Royal Prerogative and the honours system

The Public Administration Committee announced this latest examination of prerogative powers on 12 p February and it is due to report later in 2003.

By-election for hereditary peers

Details of the by-election to replace the deceased

0 allowA end1ouse o0.080t loSe39. ar2sblishiIn(eo)50(eiv)14.80

Parliamentary allowances

The Speaker of the House of Commons has announced that details of individual MPs' expenditure on parliamentary allowances will be made public from 2004. This will bring the Commons into line with practice in the Scottish Parliament and the Northern Ireland Assembly, which have already published details of individual allowances. (The Assembly in Wales has concerns about data protection, which should be resolved after the May elections). The Commons will be publishing information retrospectively, back to 2001-2. MPs and staff have a year to prepare, but the system is already under examination following the Standards Commissioner enquiry into Michael Trend MP's claims for allowance in February 2003. Sir Philip Mawer's report (HC435) made clear that the payment of allowances is not covered by parliamentary privilege, so serious abuses could end in criminal prosecutions. It also suggested that the Commons authorities could do more to offer advice and make more effective checks on payments to MPs.

created by the dispute. Education Minister Cathy with the Education Department, in arguing the case Jamieson was criticised for not being 'on message' for Welsh discretion with the Office of the Deputy but the relations between London and Edinburgh Prime Minister, and the Treasury. Clarke declared on the fire dispute and the crisis in the Scottish that no decision had been made on the "complex" fishing industry proved a running sore during the negotiations. However, Welsh First Minister Rhodri to negotiate a separate pay agreement with the Fire up at the moment," he said in early February. "Any quietly pass an amendment to 1947 legislation particular would need to compete for the best which would have empowered it to close fire stations academic staff against fee-charging Bristol and Bath was defeated when Cathy Craigie, a Labour whip just across the Bristol Channel. It's going to be a Westminster that London might impose a settlement Westminster. It is an issue of huge significance." provoked criticisms of the Executive for failing to differ with this policy and raised questions about Welsh Education Minister Jane Davidson AM is on the degree to which London had consulted record as favouring a graduate tax. But before Edinburgh prior to Prescott's announcement. The deciding a definitive policy the Assembly UK negotiating position on European fisheries policy Government is awaiting the outcome of a European and the Scottish Executive's input also came under legal test case on the Scottish Parliament's abolition scrutiny. Temperatures were raised given that the of top-up fees for Scottish students. Scottish fishing industry faces collapse as a consequence of decisions made in Brussels. The The issue is sure to play into the forthcoming Scottish Executive's involvement in this had been Assembly election on 1 May 2003. It is giving Welsh marginal.

Both the fire dispute and fishing highlight tensions increasingly unpopular in Wales. in London-Edinburgh relations which are particularly sensitive in the months leading up to elections in May. The added prospect of war with Iraq only highlights the inability to isolate devolved and retained matters especially in the context of an It was another quarter of 'logjam' and 'impasse' talk election campaign.

Wales

Top-up fees for students attending University are in October, to restore plummeting Protestant set to cause the biggest stand off between Cardiff confidence in the Belfast agreement, blurred into and Westminster since devolution, threatening the the further 'inch by inch negotiations' with Sinn National Assembly's budget and highlighting Féin—other parties now reduced to onlookers—Mr tensions over its limited powers. The Assembly Blair had abjured. controls higher education spending and in theory could prevent the introduction of the top-up fees of A new de facto 'deadline' (in the loose, Northern Education Secretary Charles Clarke in his White which would allow the institutions to be restored Paper at the end of January. However, the Assembly and the assembly election to take place on 1 May refusing to impose top-up fees could cost it around Unionist Party and SF, unsurprisingly insisted that £80 million a year, half of which could be a subsidy the election go ahead anyway. to English students studying in Wales.

It had been widely trailed ahead of the White Paper intergovernmental relations as had been expected. that powers would be devolved to allow Cardiff to The British-Irish Council continued its (episodic) go its own way on the question. Instead, however, business as usual. And, to unionist chagrin, the norththe issue was left unresolved following an inter- south institutions in Ireland were effectively placed

This event was only one manifestation of difficulties under the new Secretary of State Peter Hain sided quarter. Calls were made for the Scottish Executive Morgan was more forthright. "We've got the drains Brigades Union. An attempt by the Executive to solution has to find the extra cash Cardiff in abstained 'by mistake'. John Prescott's statement at major test of how well we can work with

Labour an opportunity to distance itself from the Blair government, perceived as becoming

Northern Ireland

in Northern Ireland as the fourth suspension of the Assembly stretched to four months—the longest since power was transferred in December 1999. The crisp 'act of completion' (aka IRA disbandment) demanded from republicans by the Prime Minister up to £3,000 a year proposed by the English Ireland, sense) of St Patrick's Day was set for a deal does not control student support. It is estimated that 2003. The anticipated beneficiaries, the Democratic

The suspension did not prove as debilitating to departmental argument in which the Wales Office on an 'east-west' basis by London and Dublin to ensure they would not atrophy. But poll data showed regret, particularly among Catholics, at the loss of self-government.

Direct-rule ministers, while wishing to be out of business at the earliest opportunity, kept the policy

Westminster MPs, and the Scotland Act will have to be amended. The necessary amendments will be

Fixing London

limits on the GLA, added to the peculiar institutional government. structure under which the London Assembly and the four 'functional bodies' work, are detrimental to the effectiveness of a strategic, enabling government. It recommends that the GLA should The Constitution Unit has published a new briefing, be permitted to issue bonds against future revenue, Fixing London, by Scott Greer and Mark Sandford. and that it should have greater power to switch The briefing analyses the institutional capacity of funding between the functional bodies. This would the Greater London Authority to address issues of enable more radical surgery to the transport and transport, economic development, infrastructure infrastructure of London without the need for and modernisation. It argues that the tight financial transferring further functions from central

Big changes at the Lord Chancellor's Department

After the 2001 election we said the Lord Chancellor's department had become a Department of Justice and Constitutional Affairs in all but name. Now it

Scottish Local Government Elections Bill

The draft Local Governance (Scotland) Bill was unveiled on 4 February 2003 by Deputy Minister for Finance and Public Services, Peter Peacock. It proposes replacing the current first-past-the-post (FPTP) voting system with a single-transferable-vote (STV) regime. Most Labour councillors oppose PR and the Scottish party's ruling executive committee voted to reject electoral reform last July. The draft bill also contains plans to encourage more diversity among councillors, including a reduction in the lower age limit on eligibility for elections to 18. There are also plans to improve financial rewards for councillors and tie pay more closely to responsibility.

Equality legislation

Equality Bill [HL 19 2003/03] in the House of Lords. fundamentally looking at the obligations we have The Bill is designed to pull together existing equalities under the convention of human rights'. Article 3 legislation and to establish an Equality Commission bars the deportation of people to a country where for Great Britain to enforce implementation. The Bill they may suffer inhumane or degrading treatment, proposes requirements that public bodies and or torture. Under the Convention it is impossible to employers take measures with a view to making derogate from Article 3 as it is an absolute right, but progress towards achieving the goals of the some lawyers argue that Britain could withdraw promotion of equality of opportunity, the from the ECHR completely and then re-enter with elimination of discrimination and the promotion of a clause attached to Article 3 allowing deportation good relations between members of different racial when the nation was under threat. groups. No date has yet been announced for the Bill's second reading.

Consultation on the Government's proposals for changes in equality laws ended on 14 February 2003 (on structural options) and 20 January 2003 (on legislative proposals). Updates on the Department of Trade and Industry's progress on reforms can be found at www.dti.gov.uk/er/equality.

Derogation from Article 3 of the ECHR raised by Blair

On 26 January 2003, speaking on the BBC's Breakfast with Frost programme, the Prime Minister raised the real possibility of Britain derogating from its commitment to the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) in order to keep the numbers of people seeking asylum down. He stated that if current measures don't work, then 'we will On 14 January 2003 Lord Lester introduced his have to consider further measures, including

EU accuses UK of human

Consultation on entitlement cards ends

The Home Office consultation on entitlement cards ended on 31 January 2003. The Entitlement Cards Unit is now in the process of analysing the responses received.

The Information Commissioner published his response to the consultation on 13 February 2003. The Commissioner raised a concern about 'function creep', for legislation to 'include stronger effective restrictions against inappropriate demands on an individual to produce their card for inspection by The Constitution Unit, in association with Capita, body accountable to Parliament for the conduct of its functions'. Richard Thomas concluded that although he is of the view that 'it is not appropriate to take the stance that an entitlement card scheme should never be proceeded with on the grounds that there will always be insurmountable privacy and data protection obstacles... However, [I am] not satisfied that the current proposals would lead to establishing a data protection compliant scheme.'

Unit's first annual Access to Information Conference others.' He also stated that any scheme and register is holding its first Annual Conference on Access to should not be administered by a government Information for the Public Sector on 14 May 2003. department but by 'a new independent statutory The keynote address will be given by Richard

Convention on the Future of Europe

Drafts of the first 16 articles of the proposed constitution for the EU were published on 6 February. The draft articles, produced by the president of the convention Giscard d'Estaing and his 12 member inner praesidium, deal with the EU's

Publication review

Parliament at the Apex

This pamphlet from the Hansard Society aims to take forward a theme developed in the Society's Commission on the Scrutiny Role of Parliament.

An array of independent regulators, commissions

